

Julia Potter Marx

February 20, 1951 - May 6, 2026

Julie Potter Marx died 04/18/2026 in her home in Ferndale, Washington, which she shared with her husband since 1975 and two daughters. She loved to garden, sing, and read, except when it came to pith like obituaries. She would say her greatest accomplishments are her English degree from UW, touring across the country with the cast of 'Hair,' and the time she dressed up as Big Bird to do a belly dancing routine at a Shriner's bar in Eastern Washington.

She was an enthusiastic member of several book clubs, favoring a good balance of non-fiction and Dave Barry re-reads. After she retired from student services at WWU, she would spend her days feeding the birds, arranging flowers a la Ikibana, and circling typos in the Seattle Times while keeping up on current events.

Her other pride and joy are her three grandsons; as different and as loved as her own three brothers (survived by two). Julie was a proud breast cancer survivor. She joins her mother, father, older brother, great uncle, and aunt and husband in the great beyond
